

FROM THE FLOOR

By Genevieve M. Clavreul, RN, Ph.D.

Cry Havoc

The curious case of Amanda Trujillo and the Arizona Board of Nursing

"Cry 'Havoc,' and let slip the dogs of war..."

— William Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, Act III Scene I

This is the age of social networking. So many Americans (including nurses) receive the majority of their information via the Internet that it is no longer a phenomenon but a way of life, affecting everything from social trends to political movements. As a result, it has become very easy for even minor incidents to "go viral" almost overnight, garnering thousands of hits and hundreds of followers on websites like YouTube and Twitter.

Some of these viral trends have brought about positive change, promoting awareness of social ills or legal wrongdoings, but Internet activism also has a dark side, which rears its ugly head whenever the masses take up a cause without knowing all the facts. Soon, there are cries for action based on innuendo and knee-jerk responses.

What happens when the facts do come to light and show that the situation is not what it initially appeared? What if the "wronged" individual turns out not to be so blameless or an accused person proves to be genuinely innocent? How do we un-ring that bell?

Most of the time, the public's short attention span seems to remedy such situations, quickly relegating the offending incident to the junk pile of history, but there are some cases that refuse to disappear, taking on a life of their own. One such case is Amanda Trujillo, an Arizona nurse whose story has become a cause célèbre in the online nursing community.

Meet Amanda Trujillo

For those who may be unfamiliar with the Trujillo case, here is a brief recap. In April 2011, Amanda Trujillo, an RN at Banner Del E. Webb Medical Center in Sun City West, Ariz., clashed with a staff physician after Trujillo provided a patient with information about the ramifications of liver transplant surgery and discussed the patient's options for hospice care. The hospital fired Trujillo in May and filed a complaint against her with the Arizona State Board of Nursing (AZBN), claiming she had practice outside the scope of her duties and failed to uphold expected standards of care.

In December, Trujillo sent an email about the situation to various popular nursing bloggers. In her email, Trujillo said she was dismissed for attempting to educate a terminally ill patient who had consented to liver transplant surgery without ever being told about the details of the surgery and its aftermath or even that the patient might have other options for care. Trujillo maintains that all the information she provided was from the hospital's approved materials and that she had documented everything for the doctor to follow up later. However, she said that after hearing that the patient was having second thoughts about their course of treatment, the doctor "threw a well-witnessed tantrum," demanding that the hospital fire Trujillo and have her license revoked.

Trujillo said that she was fired without even receiving a hearing before the hospital ethics committee, and that because of the complaint against her, she has been unable to find other work, forcing her and her teenage daughter to go on welfare.

Trujillo also said that the Arizona Nursing Association had been unwilling to support her, and that the blot on her record undermined her efforts to work with State Senator Nancy Barto (R-Scottsdale) on legislation intended to cal instruments at nurses in the operating theater, but had never been disciplined because none of the nurses he abused were willing to report it. He was finally sanctioned after he slapped a patient, who had no problem filing a complaint against him. (After that, his behavior changed for the better!)

Hearing Both Sides

Naturally, Nurse Trujillo soon found many champions on the various nursing blogs, which is how I first learned of her story. As compelling as it was, I found much of her tale somewhat one-sided; at that point, the Arizona Board of Nursing had remained silent on the community. Some of Trujillo's defenders quickly renewed their condemnation of the "horrible and corrupt" board members, but others began to quietly question their support for a nurse they knew only through the Internet, email and telephone conversations. Expressing such doubts was risky: the supporters were quick to turn on those nurses who dared suggest that perhaps Nurse Trujillo was not the blameless martyr they had thought she was.

When blogger "Not Nurse Ratched" posted the complete notice of charges, she received a barrage of comments casting aspersions on her integrity and even implying that she Nurse Trujillo found many champions on various nursing blogs, which is how I first learned of her story. As compelling as it was, I found much of her tale one-sided, and decided to monitor the case closely. That's why my daughter found herself driving me to Phoenix in March to watch Trujillo's administrative hearing.

protect the rights of terminal patients and "define the role of the nurse in end-of-life teaching/counseling."

Trujillo said that after reviewing her case, the AZBN's nurse investigator had recommended that the complaint against her be dismissed, but the board had decided to go forward anyway, ordering her to face an administrative hearing in January of this year. Trujillo closed her email with a plea for readers to share her story as widely as possible.

Needless to say, Trujillo's much-publicized letter evoked passionate responses from nurses. Who among us hasn't worked with a doctor with a big ego who objected if a nurse so much as questioned his or her orders? I'll never forget a neurosurgeon I once worked with who constantly yelled, threw tantrums and even hurled surgimatter, as they were legally obliged to do. I decided to monitor Trujillo's case closely, both online and in the formal proceedings.

That's why my daughter found herself driving me to Phoenix in March to watch Trujillo's administrative hearing. (The hearing was originally scheduled for late January, but was delayed two months after the AZBN demanded that Trujillo undergo a complete psychiatric evaluation.) The hearing room was packed, and although not everyone was there for Trujillo's case, quite a few had come to show their support. You can imagine our surprise and dismay when we learned that Trujillo wouldn't be attending, having requested a postponement because she had changed attorneys — something of which she'd failed to inform her many loyal followers and supporters.

The hearing room sat in stunned silence as a board member read the lengthy list of charges against Trujillo. Afterward, some interesting things began to take shape in the online com-

had come by the document through nefarious means. (I found such comments rather ludicrous, since I had obtained a copy of the same document simply by requesting it from the AZBN — the list of factual allegations became public information after the charges were presented at a public meeting of the board.)

The Events in Question

When reading a tale of woe like Nurse Trujillo's, it's easy to have a visceral response. Trujillo presents herself as a caring nurse dealing with a dying patient who seemed lost and confused because the doctor had not provided enough information. Many of us have experienced something like this with our own patients or know of a colleague with a similar experience.

Trujillo says she did her best to educate and advocate in accordance with the core principles of nursing, only to be verbally assaulted by the doctor for her supposed interference, and then discover that hospital management was unwilling to stand by her. However, the allegations presented by the board paint a very different picture. According to the official list of charges, the patient in question was actually being treated for a head laceration and fractured hip, and hadn't even undergone an evaluation for liver transplant surgery; the doctor had postponed that evaluation until after recovery.

If you wish to share an opinion about this article, please visit our Facebook page: Facebook.com/WorkingNurse

The complaint against Trujillo alleges that she attempted to educate the patient in the middle of the night (between 1:00 and 3:00 a.m.) while the patient "was under the under the influence of narcotics, recovering from hip

Phoenix and Mountain Vista Medical Center in Mesa, Ariz. Trujillo resigned from all three jobs in 2010 and is ineligible for re-hire at either Mayo Clinic or Mountain Vista. Trujillo is also accused of violating Arizona's Nurse Practice Act by identifying herself as a DNSc-NP(s) "when [she] had not graduated with a DNSc degree, was not studying for a DNSc degree and was not licensed as a Nurse Practitioner in Arizona."

Victim or Villain?

So, here we have two very different pictures. Which is the more accurate? If you are a supporter of Nurse yourself this: Even if the hospital is determined to get Trujillo's license pulled, as her supporters claim, what about the patients, whose stories suggest that Nurse Trujillo might indeed have overstepped her authority? The patients don't have a dog in this hunt, so what motive would they have to corroborate the AZBN charges?

Then there's that pesky allegation that when Trujillo and her attorney were provided with the names of fellow nurses who had given statements to the board about the complaints, Trujillo contacted three of those witnesses by phone, text or email and

Then there's that pesky allegation that when Trujillo and her attorney were provided with the names of fellow nurses who had given statements to the board about the complaints, Trujillo contacted three of those witnesses by phone, text or email and threatened to sue them for defamation.

surgery and exhibiting abnormal psychosocial status" and that as part of that "teaching," Trujillo told the patient that after a liver transplant, "the transplant people will ask you things and hound you and hound you and you won't be able to live alone anymore."

That incident is only one of many cited in the board's list of factual allegations, which also includes complaints related to Trujillo's previous jobs at the Mayo Clinic and Valley Home Care in Trujillo's, the AZBN is on a witch hunt, out to destroy a good nurse who is guilty of nothing more than advocating for her patient and doing what any nurse is expected to do. Her detractors see a nurse with a checkered past who engaged in questionable actions against hospital policy, and who is now manipulating the Internet to sway public opinion.

If you believe that Nurse Trujillo is completely blameless, you might ask threatened to sue them for defamation. Perhaps those nurses had an axe to grind, but if so, wouldn't it have been simpler for them to tell the investigators nothing, rather than risk a defamation lawsuit?

To Be Continued

Amanda Trujillo's tale is far from over. Her case was not on the docket of the AZBN meeting in April, but she has whipped up such a frenzy in the nursing community that the board has been bombarded with calls, letters and emails — many of which have been described to me as heated and impolite. Trujillo's story has truly lit up the nursing blogs, websites and LISTSERVs in a fashion rarely seen. But is she a victim or is she an artful dodger, tugging at our collective heartstrings to further her cause?

Some observers have speculated that Trujillo's aggressive use of the Internet to publicize her plight may have caused the AZBN to pursue her case with extra diligence, which may or not be true. However, just as everything Trujillo has posted can be used to advance her cause, much of it can also

Amanda Trujillo Has Gone Viral

An early post about the situation:

www.nurseratchedspace.com/2012/01/standing-with-amanda-trujillo

A copy of Trujillo's original letter and a letter from her first attorney:

www.thenerdynurse.com/2012/01/arizona-nurse-has-license-threatened-by-doctor-after-providing-patient-education.html

An update following the AZBN meeting in March, including a copy of the formal charges against Trujillo:

www.notratched.net/2012/03/27/documentation-from-the-az-bon-on-amanda-trujillo

This article with easy links can be found at WorkingNurse.com.

HEALTH SERVICES SPECIALIST (RN) (BSN)

JOB #CCC926

Requires BSN degree AND two years of medical office, public health or industrial nursing experience. Reference Job #CCC926 in all correspondence. Download the District Academic Application on our website at <http://aptrkr.com/253888>, or email requests to hr@nocc.edu, or contact the Human Resources Office at (714) 808-4810. Application package must be received by June 19, 2012, 5:00 p.m.. Postmarks will not be honored. Application packages received after the closing deadline will not be accepted.

be used against her. In fact, several of the charges against Trujillo are directly related to her online publicity campaign, including allegations that her public statements violated the confidentiality of her patients.

At this point, we can only sit back and wait for the next AZBN hearing and Trujillo's next salvo. Whichever side you may fall on in this discussion, it's quite apparent that Nurse Trujillo has successfully cried "Havoc" and let slip the Internet's dogs of war. Whether she will be successful in her defense — and what will happen afterward — we must all wait and see. WN

UPDATE

There is an update to the story in our April issue entitled "While You Were Sleeping," which concerned the dissolution of the California Board of Registered Nursing on Dec. 31, 2011. Since then, Gov. Brown has appointed four members to the newly constituted board. They are: Michael Deangelo Jackson, RN, 40, of Chula Vista; Cindy Cipres Klein, RN, 44, of Canyon Lake; Raymond Mallel, 75, of Agoura Hills; and Trande Phillips, RN, 62, of Walnut Creek.

For longer biographies of these individuals, please visit WorkingNurse.com and do an article search for "BRN."

Healthcare Reform June Update

by Genevieve M. Clavreul, RN, Ph.D.

The Back Story

On March 23, 2010, President Obama signed into law the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (ACA), which goes into effect gradually through 2014. Stay tuned as we guide working nurses through the twists and turns and addresses the question, "What's going on with healthcare reform?"

Catholic Institutions Sue Over Birth Control Regulations

In late May, 43 Catholic institutions, including the University of Notre Dame, the Archdiocese of Washington and the Michigan Catholic Conference (to name a few) filed 12 separate lawsuits against the Department of Health and Human Services over recently released regulations requiring them to cover "drugs and procedures in direct conflict with religious beliefs."

The lawsuits come in response to new regulations that would require religious institutions (through their insurers) to pay for coverage of abortion-inducing drugs, contraception and sterilization, regardless of the employers' moral or religious objections. WN

Genevieve M. Clavreul RN, Ph.D., is a healthcare management consultant who has experience as a DON and as a lecturer on hospital and nursing management. She can be reached at (626) 844-7812 or gmc@solutionsoutsidethebox.net

Roze Room Hospice®

LOS ANGELES • SAN FERNANDO VALLEY • VENTURA
SAN GABRIEL VALLEY • SOUTH BAY/LONG BEACH

AVAILABLE POSITIONS:

RNs: DPCS, Case Managers, Admissions, Palliative Care, and Bilingual Mandarin and/or Cantonese

Roze Room Hospice, a JCAHO accredited program, offers unique opportunities for qualified professionals who want to work in a rewarding environment. Serving patients out of five locations.

Contact Nadine Harris

nharris@rozeroomhospice.org • Tel 800-828-9017 Fax 323-936-7573

Women's Health Care Clinic Education Program

Women's Health Update

at California Endowment Center

1000 N. Alameda Street Los Angeles, CA 90012

Thursday October 25, 2012

Speakers include: Anita Nelson, MD; Mary Rubin, PhD;
Patty Cason, FNP; Jennifer Haddad, MTP;
Dannelle Pietersz, RNP; and more

Sessions

Colposcopy Update (All Day) 7.5 CH
Sterilization Counseling (All Day) 7.5 CH
IUD Placement Skills Lab (AM) 3.25 CH
Diabetes Medical Management (AM) 3.75 CH
Mandatory Reporting (AM) 3.75 CH
Nexplanon® Placement Training (PM) No CH
Hypertension Management (PM) 3.75 CH
LARC Counseling (PM) 3.75 CH

$150 for All Day ~ $80.00 for Half Day
Early Registration ends 10/06/12

For more information please contact Lynnette Short at 310.222.3729
or email: lshort@labiomed.org

Please visit our website for all Program Information
www.womenshealthup.org

CA BRN approved CE Provider #30